Lebanon Public Library

Lebanon, IN

The Lebanon Public Library opened in 1905, an original Carnegie Library. As demand for more programs and services grew over the years throughout the community, the need for additional space became imperative.

The addition and remodeling involved a reorganization of the interior spaces and expansion of all library services. The goal was to increase the size while maintaining the architectural style and character of the original building. New spaces housing children's, teen's, a genealogy section and a stylized vending area called the "Sugar Bowl" designed after a local ice cream parlor were all added.
